

Consultation report on deafblind people and their families' experience of direct payments

From June to November 2007, Sense's Deafblind Direct project consulted deafblind people and families on their experiences of direct payments. Respondents included individuals who use direct payments and those who had thought about using them. Sense published this report in 2008.

The key findings included issues around access to information about direct payments, the amount of direct payment, finding specialist support and managing direct payments.
