

Education

- Transition: Changing times From the Summer 2008 issue. When you have multi-sensory impairments, moving from school into the adult world isn't always easy. Sarah Butler explores this transition stage and how families and young people experience a time of change, uncertainty and possibilities.
- A new curriculum for Victoria School's MSI Unit From the Summer 2008 issue. Heather Murdoch, who teaches in the MSI Unit, Victoria School, Birmingham, describes how a new curriculum has been developed for children with MSI (multi-sensory impaired).
- Education: Learning from Samir From the Summer 2008 issue. It seemed a tall order for a boy with so many difficulties to attend a mainstream school. But Samir – and all his teachers and friends at the school – got so much out of the experience. Patricia Gibbons, Advisory teacher for deafblind and multi-sensory impaired children, tells the story.
- Jack mixes it at school How to combine mainstream school with specialist help? Eight year old Jack shows how it can be done, says Beverley Mars
- Rhythm of learning – Summer 2010 In the second of a series of articles about putting the MSI curriculum into action, Heather Murdoch and Rosie McMinn from the Victoria School MSI Unit describe the part played by music and rhythm.
- Dramatic dialogue - Spring 2011 Heather Murdoch describes how drama in their MSI curriculum has given the children at the Victoria MSI Unit in Birmingham the chance to learn, experiment and have fun.
